It is always good practice to close your telephone talk by saying "goodbye."

If you hang up the receiver without doing so, the party to whom you are talking may continue to talk or at least remain at the telephone, wasting his time and keeping the line from being used by somebody else.

The "goodbye" at the end of a telephone falk is an infallible signal to hang up the receiver without delay—it terminates the telephone talk graciously and effectively, and when both parties hang up simultaneously it helps the operator in her work.
